The recent visit to Asia by President Barack Obama in April proved to be a historic pivoting or rebalancing of U.S. policies toward Asia. It reflected the rapid and significant political and economic changes in the region.

Prime Minister Abe's office decided to send special teams to major cities in the United States to discuss various issues against this backdrop. The teams will be comprised of members from a variety of backgrounds, including business executives, professionals and students. They will be selected through an open application process. These teams will be headed by former Ambassador Ichiro Fujisaki who represented Japan to the United States until November 2012.

The members are ready to discuss the situation in Asia in general. They are also happy to discuss Japanese policies including Abenomics and the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) agreement.

This is designed to be a two-way dialogue. Your questions and views are most welcome.

Please do come, participate, and enjoy!

This program is co-organized by the Consulate General of Japan at Chicago and the Japan-America Society of Indiana
