Documentary Film, "Living through March 11"

Kenji Aoike, 2012, Japanese with English subtitles, 2012, 97 minutes

Kenji Aoike's documentary recounts the aftermath of the Great East Japan Earthquake of March 11, 2011, at the Kadowaki Elementary School in Ishinomaki, Miyagi Prefecture. How the school's teachers and young students remember this powerful event is simultaneously informative about Japanese society and community. Based on interviews with 37 individuals associated with the elementary school, the video recounts the reactions and decisions made immediately following the massive earthquake. The film will be followed by a panel discussion on the medical aspect of disaster and also on children as a historical motif in Japan's modern experience with disasters.
