Mr. Keats, the Executive Director of the Geographic Society of Chicago, has been a frequent visitor to Japan since 1972. He is a graduate of Harvard College where he majored in social anthropology. Over the years, he has visited many areas of Japan not seen by the average visitor and has captured many of these images with his camera. Combining those images with some historic old photographs, he will give a visual presentation revealing the modern Japan as it appears in today's news and movies, showing where these modern elements came from, and what elements remain of the older, traditional society.
